As a Prime Movers Media Student you will work with Professional Journalist and college journalism interns to create television, radio, newspaper and online media products.

In return, you'll learn increase your writing, speaking, critical thinking, team building, and 21st century technology skills.

But more importantly, you'll be part of one of nation's first journalism mentorship program targeting urban schools. We send veteran journalists and university interns to mentor high school students with major media projects in Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia.

While we encourage high school students to consider careers in the news media, even if they don't become journalists, our intergenerational program helps them become knowledgeable consumers of news and information.

Our professional mentors come from radio, television, newspapers and online media companies and dedicate time to develop and mentor students in mass media programs. Interns from George Washington's School of Media and Public Affairs and Temple University's Department of Journalism assist throughout a full semester. They help teachers deliver 21st century cutting-edge communications technology projects for high school students.

If that is the kind of career skills you are seeking, and you are READY to make the commitment necessary to be one of us click here to contact a representative.
